課程大綱 Course Outline

Organization theory is a macro-level investigation of organizations. This course introduces fundamental concepts of organization theory and provides a forum for diagnosing and analyzing organization related issues. The course will be taught in English.

What this course is?

This course is a fundamental course for PhD students and an advanced course for MBA students. For PhD students, this course familiarizes students early in their PhD with organization theory. For MBA students, this course provides a forum for students to discuss the practical application of organization theory in topics that are critical to organization success.

What this course is not?

- This course is not a thesis writing class. Although this course includes homework to guide you toward exploration of your research interest, we will not discuss your thesis or review your thesis, which you need to work with your advisor.
- This course is not a listening-only class. The course provides ample opportunities for students to present and share their learning, which has been proved to be a better way of learning.

Note:

This course requires strong self-motivation in learning and thinking. Before each class, students are required to read the textbook and complete the homework on time.

This course is taught in English and requires each student to take an active role in class.

For effective learning, this course requires a proof of English proficiency. (e.g., CEFR B2 and above, TOEIC 750 and above, IELTS 5.5 and above, TOEFL 550 and above, or obtaining last academic degree in an English taught program)
