課程描述 Course Description
Given the widespread of globalization, interactions among groups are becoming common yet the interactions can bring both positive as well as negative consequences. This course is designed to develop graduate students' awareness of the cultural differences and similarities across ethnic and regional groups, and the abilities to appreciate, even to design cross-cultural studies. The more we understand the differences between cultures, the less conflicts would likely to occur. Cross-cultural studies include many aspects: anthropology, history, literature, business, communication, art, cognition and so on. This course will particularly focus on psychology and its implication on education to fulfill the general goal of the international education program of ours. A spectrum of research and theory will be introduced in this course, including social, socio-cultural, personality, cognitive, and developmental perspectives in psychology and education. Course objectives: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> <li>1. To understand the complexity of culture;</li> <li>2. To appreciate the cross-cultural studies in educational field;</li> <li>3. To become more aware of cultural differences in students' cognition and learning.</li> </ol>
