課程描述 Course Description
Nowadays, teachers of young learners of English in Taiwan are often encouraged to use children's literature in their teaching. One of the biggest challenges in using children's literature to facilitate the English language development of children for EFL teachers relates to selection and methodology. The issues involved in selecting and using children's literature with language development as a primary aim are necessarily very different in different contexts. Determining the extent to which these materials actually provide useful resources for teaching and learning is not something that can be done on the basis of the materials alone. It is therefore important for the students who take this class to be clear not only about the intended audience in the selected texts but also about general and specific objectives and intended outcomes in terms of English learning. In this class students will be able to 1.see how far children's literature can take you to English teaching 2.compare cultures across plots 3.identify the types of materials that best prepare students for academic work in English 4.dispel stereotypes and get facts from the source
