| This course explores the aesthetic, political, and psychological dimensions of European literature from the late 19th to the late 20th century, focusing on texts that interrogate identity, social upheaval, and the limits of representation. Through drama, poetry, and prose, students will examine how European writers responded to modernity’ s discontents—revolution, alienation, eroticism, and absurdity—while reshaping literary form and cultural critique. Primary texts include Anton Chekhov’ s "The Cherry Orchard," a tragicomic meditation on class transition and historical inertia; Dario Fo’ s "Can’ t Pay? Won’ t Pay!", a farcical indictment of consumer capitalism and political resistance; Thomas Mann’ s "Death in Venice," a novella of aesthetic obsession and moral decay; selected poems by Charles Baudelaire and Arthur Rimbaud, whose symbolist and visionary styles revolutionized lyric subjectivity; and Milan Kundera’ s "Life Is Elsewhere," a postmodern novel that satirizes poetic idealism and political naïveté. Through close reading, comparative analysis, and theoretical framing, students will engage with themes such as: <ul style="list-style-type: none"><li>- The collapse of aristocratic and bourgeois values</li><li>- The eroticization of death and beauty</li><li>- Revolutionary desire and its theatrical forms</li><li>- The poet as prophet, clown, or traitor</li><li>- The tension between personal freedom and historical determinism</li></ul> |                                                                                                                                                              |                             |    |                                    |                                                                                          |
