課程描述 Course Description
Linguistics is a field of study dedicated to understanding how language is acquired, used, lost, and recovered. The aims of this two-semester course are to teach students: (1) the definition and components of language; (2) how a first language (L1) is typically acquired and used; (3) how L1 is acquired under special circumstances; (4) internal language processes; and (5) how to apply linguistics to language teaching. In the first semester, students are introduced to the definition and main components of language, such as phonology, phonetics, morphology, semantics, and syntax. In the second semester, students explore the importance of successful first language (L1) acquisition, the consequences of unsuccessful language acquisition, and the intricate relationship between language and cognitive well-being. Students will receive a copy of the syllabus on the first day of class.
課程目標 Course Objectives
This course aims to give an introduction to basic concepts of linguistics and the method of argumentation, justification, and hypothesis testing within the field.
